Smell THIS

Italian Lessons

Salvatore Ferragamo's Signorina contains rose, peony, and notes that smell like panna cotta. We asked the Lord & Taylor fragrance saleswomen to try it without telling them what it was.

—ALEXANDRA OWENS

"It's sweet, not overwhelming. I smell rose and vanilla. I'd wear it if I was trying to find a husband."

—Christine Aidiniou

"The top note is peony. As it dries, you get spice. There's no age for this—it's feminine, romantic, and classic."

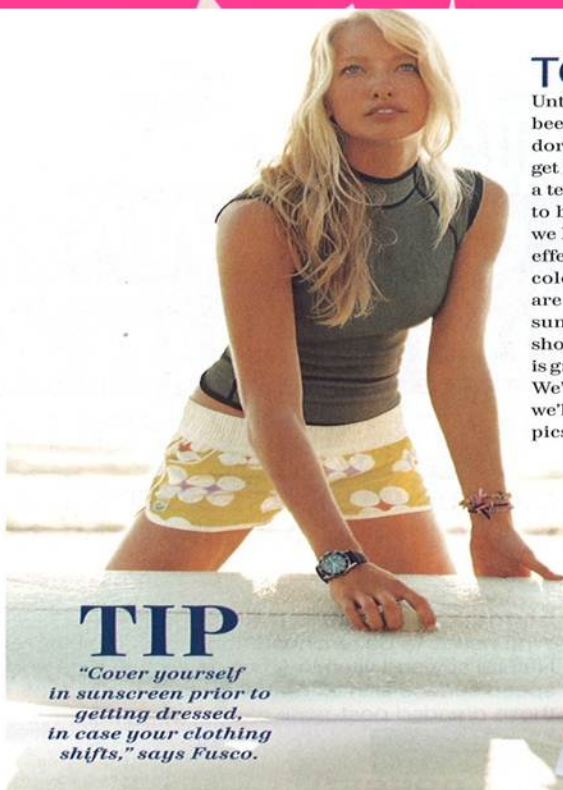

—Lorraine Larsen

"If you were walking through a restaurant, this would leave your scent—it's head-turning."

—Lorraine Muschio Bruno

TIP

"Cover yourself in sunscreen prior to getting dressed, in case your clothing shifts," says Fusco.

TOP PROTECTION

Until now, sun-protective clothing has been smart, practical, and, well, completely dorky. No matter how much we want to get behind clothes that double as sunscreen, a teal camo-motif wetsuit is never going to be part of our weekend look. That's why we love Parasol UPF 50+ tops—they're as effective as the strongest sunscreen, and the color-block and nautical-stripe prints are adorable. "People rarely apply enough sunscreen or reapply as often as they should, which is why sun-protective clothing is great," says dermatologist Francesca Fusco. We'll be wearing these tops all summer—and we'll have the unfried skin and cute vacation pics to prove it.

The Big Squeeze

THE SCOOP

THE NEWS: LashControl mascara has a clever squeezable tube that lets you control how much formula goes on the brush when you pull it out—without having to scrape off the excess. HOW IT WORKS: The middle of the tube is made of pliable rubber; if you want understated lashes, firmly squeeze the center as you pull out the wand to prevent too much pigment from coating the brush. For a more pumped-up look, just squeeze the tube gently or not at all. THE VERDICT: It's not often we get excited about product packaging, but the fact that we don't have to wipe globs of formula off the tip of the brush before using it is appealing. That said, the volumizing formula flakes a bit, and we wish it was more dramatic.
